EICHMANN LOOKED FOR MORE ELEGANT WAY TO MASSACRE JEWS THAN BY SHOOTING "BECAUSE OUR PEOPLE ARE BECOMING SADISTS"; LET HIS JEWISH AUNT ESCAPE WHILE MILLIONS DIED IN GAS CHAMBERS

Adolf Eichmann refused, at his trial in Jerusalem, a last chance to say that his wartime offer to exchange 1,000,000 Jews for 10,000 army trucks had been motivated by compassion. He continued to insist that nothing more than bureaucratic spite and expediency had prompted the offer.

He acknowledged that the deportation of Hungarian Jews to Auschwitz continued without interruption in May, 1944, while the Jewish messenger, Joel Brand, was on his way to the Middle East with the Jews-for-trucks proposal, says the New York Times. Eichmann conceded that his heart was never in the deal, but he denied that he had ever thought of sabotaging it.

Attorney General Gideon Hausner forced Eichmann to admit that deportations to gas chambers were pressed by him despite warnings from Jewish leaders that this might wreck the negotiations.

He said that, as head of the Jewish Affairs section of the Gestapo (secret police), he had orders to proceed with the deportations until the Allied powers acquiesced. That was why he urged Mr. Brand to get in touch with Zionist leaders with all speed, Eichmann explained.

The presiding judge, Moshe Landau, found it incredible that such an offer could have been born of petty expediency.

Eichmann had said he was jealous of Col. Kurt Becher, a special aide of Heinrich Himmler, head of the S.S. (élite guard). He said that Becher was "poking his nose" into the deportations of Jews and that he had proposed that Jews be ransomed instead of exterminated.

"Did you not have any other motive?" Judge Landau asked. Eichmann began a long, involved reply. He said:

"This was a chain of events . . . with complex motives."

Judge Landau interrupted again. "Were you in favor of this transaction and if so why?" the judge demanded. Again Eichmann started to explain that he wanted to wrest the matter of Jewish emigration from the hands of Becher.

"Was that the only reason?" Judge asked. "I want a clear answer. Why did you favor the lorries-for-Jews transaction — only because of rivalry between yourself and Becher? Answer me."

There was silence in the court. The crowded gallery strained for Eichmann's reply. Here was the moment for Eichmann to plead some mitigating factor in his case — to confess that a spark of compassion had entered his barter deal, says the New York Times. He had admitted that the murder of Jews was "hideous . . . heinous."

But Eichmann, bone-tired and irritable, refused to unbend. He looked at the three judges and said:

"Why? . . . Well, as I said before, there was first and foremost the question of Becher's part in emigration . . ."

"Very well," Judge Landau said and sat back.

The prosecution had turned to the Hungarian chapter after a session that Eichmann found irksome to the point of anger. In a rare burst of anger Eichmann protested to his Israeli judges that he was being "roasted" until he was "done."

He had been questioned at length by the Attorney General, who once again confronted him with passages from the so-called Sassen document. This consists of a series of interviews with Eichmann by a Dutch journalist Willem A. Sassen, Eichmann's collaborator on a proposed book.

The interviews were held in Buenos Aires over a period of four months in 1957. Eichmann had denounced the Sassen document as a mixture of truth and falsehoods. He said Sassen had plied him with wine and schnapps to loosen his tongue.

He also pleaded that he had exaggerated his role because he had been egged on to literary heights by Sassen, who "wanted to do a best-seller."

What really provoked Eichmann was Mr. Hausner's questions about some marginal corrections Eichmann made in the Sassen transcript. He was asked by Mr. Hausner to read a corrected passage. The passage quoted Eichmann as having said that in accordance with orders from R. H. S. A. (Reich Security Headquarters), he had put pressure on the Slovak Minister of the Interior and on the German envoy to Slovakia to speed up deportations of Jews. That was in June, 1942.

Eichmann had written "R. H. S. A." into the margin to replace the original word "Sipo" (Security Police Headquarters). But when he read the passage in court he reverted to "Sipo."

It was an insignificant slip — Sipo no longer existed as a separate entity because it had been absorbed by the R.H.S.A. by 1942, says the New York Times. But Eichmann flushed with rage when Mr. Hausner asked why he was now correcting a correction.

"I do not know," Eichmann snapped. "I can only say one thing quite clearly — from now on I shall not answer any further questions in connection with this document. The whole document is completely muddled and does not at all tally with reality."

"You will continue to answer questions until I tell you to discontinue," the presiding judge, Moshe Landau, interposed with a frown.

Eichmann calmed down quickly. "Yes, Your Honor, I shall continue answering questions," he replied with deference.

"But I must point out I have a feeling I am being roasted until the rump-steak is done," he added. Earlier Eichmann tore the earphones from his head and dropped them with a thud on his desk in a fit of pique over the enunciation of the interpreter.

"He draws words out too long," Eichmann said, glaring at the booth where an interpreter was toiling over the simultaneous translations from Hebrew into German. Everyone, including the judges and journalists, has given the interpreter a hard time at this trial.

Although he generally kept rancor out of his voice, Eichmann showed mounting resentment as Mr. Hausner pressed him to read generous excerpts from the Sassen document, in which Eichmann portrayed himself as a big wheel in the genocide conspiracy, quite the opposite of the "small cog" image that the defense counsel, Dr. Robert Servatius, has so painstakingly attempted to create for the judges.

Mr. Hausner asked Eichmann about a speech Eichmann made to German police officers in Berlin late in the war. As Sassen had it, Eichmann discussed the Jewish problem and told the police: "This thousand-year-old scourge of mankind will leave us in peace once and for all."

"Did you say that?" Mr. Hausner asked. Eichmann exploded. "Even if I said this at the lecture, I would have to be a complete fool and a madman to have recorded it in Buenos Aires," the defendant declared, says the New York Times. In an aside, Mr. Hausner commented sarcastically: "We have heard you say this before."

Eichmann replied: "In any case, I could not have said this at the lecture. Mueller would not have permitted it. I had to give practical information to senior police officers, and not expound theories or opinions.

"All this stuff was put in (by Sassen) to make a best-seller. I would have been an absolute fool to say this to Sassen, even if it were true."

"Well, was what you said true or not?" Mr. Hausner demanded.

Eichmann banged his hand against the file containing the Sassen document and shook his head vigorously. "I will not accept this," he said. "I demand that the tape recordings be brought here and played back. It is quite possible that sentences I never said were added to the transcript."

Eichmann conceded having written a pamphlet on the final solution of the Jewish problem. It was never published, he said, although it reached the galley-proof stage. All it contained was facts and figures of Jewish deportations, he said.

Returning to the Sassen document, Eichmann complained that typing errors added to the inaccuracies of the interviews. Thus, when Mr. Hausner challenged him about a passage that read: "I had direct jurisdiction over all my subordinates, senior police commanders, S.S. (élite guard) majors and captains * * * advisers on Jewish affairs at foreign embassies," Eichmann said the passage should read: "I had no direct jurisdiction. The typist skipped a word," he explained.

Mr. Hausner made Eichmann read a passage in which Eichmann bragged that high officials of the German Foreign Ministry had to "cool their heels" in his outer office while waiting to see him.

Eichmann was evasive when the Attorney General asked if the passage was correct finally. Judge Landau broke in, "But you said these words, did you not?" the judge demanded, says the New York Times. Eichmann replied: "I was egged on by liquor. I was drunk. Thus there are certain errors." Finally he declared: "Yes, I have to admit I said this. But I do not know whether this is word-perfect."

Asked about another passage heavily marked with handwritten corrections in which Eichmann again boasted that Franz Rademacher, Foreign Office expert on Jewish affairs, "likes taking orders from me," Eichmann said in a tired voice that his collaborator, Sassen, kept telling him to "spur my imagination."

"I wanted, as a matter of fact, to reproduce the spirit of the period, the 'Zeitgeist.' Therefore it was not important that I was confusing my personality with that of others."

Adolf Eichmann said he had urged an alternative to the mass shootings of Jews by the Nazis, but he denied having proposed the use of gas.

Attorney General Gideon Hausner tried to get the tall, emaciated, former Gestapo officer to admit that he had recommended gas as "a more elegant method" of killing Jews. But Eichmann said the only solution he had ever proposed for the "Jewish problem" was to ship the Jews to Madagascar.

"I was against a physical solution, whether by gas or by bullets," he maintained.

Mr. Hausner confronted Eichmann with a scribbled note written by Dr. Ernst Wetzel, Jewish affairs expert in the Ministry for Eastern Affairs, saying that Eichmann, the Gestapo's Jewish affairs expert, was "in agreement" on the shift from shooting to gassing.

"Did you have any contact with this Wetzel?" Mr. Hausner asked.

"Yes," Eichmann replied, "I came into contact with Wetzel several times."

"Was he the one that said that more elegant methods should be found?" the Attorney General asked.

"I don't know exactly who said it," Eichmann answered. "I pointed this out in my police interrogation. My way was not the way of violence of any kind. It (the Madagascar plan) was common knowledge in my department — I always explained this to my subordinates, in writing and orally."

"And therefore," Mr. Hausner said, "This Wetzel reports that they discarded the system of shooting for a system of gassing and that you had given your consent to this new method."

"I must object most emphatically," said Eichmann with composure after studying the document. "I believe I can prove my point here—"

"We have heard this before," Justice Benjamin Halevi interposed.

"I am referring to the handwriting," Eichmann continued, says the New York Times. "I should like to point out that it would be worthwhile having this document examined by a professional graphologist."

"Look here," Mr. Hausner broke in, "this is an official document, it was presented to a court, to an international tribunal (at the Nuremberg war crimes trials). You stand there and claim this is a forged document."

But Eichmann stood there in his glass cage and without hesitation proceeded to cast doubt on the Wetzel note. "When one looks at the scribbled handwriting, one can see clearly that R.H.S.A. (Reich Security Headquarters) is not at all meant in this document," he asserted.

"I am sure if this letter is examined by an expert it will be crystal clear that neither the words 'Sturmbannfuehrer (Major, the rank held by Eichmann in 1941)' nor 'Eichmann' appear here," he declared. "Therefore, I should like to request the court to submit this letter to an expert."

After another exchange about the authenticity of the document, Mr. Hausner asked in exasperation: "Now did you or did you not discuss the question of gas with Wetzel?"

"I did not speak with Wetzel about gas and the killing by gas because I had no share whatsoever in the killing," Eichmann replied confidently.

He again insisted that he had had nothing to do with the question of gas, that it was his aide, Maj. Rolf Guenther, who had been involved in this.

But Mr. Hausner kept pressing, until Eichmann cried: "I already said I can't give detailed, accurate answers while testifying on oath. But I am ready to take all this upon myself rather than create the impression I am trying to evade responsibility."

The court immediately saw in this a variation of Eichmann's threat to give a "Russian-style confession," admitting crimes he had never committed, says the New York Times. The presiding Judge Moshe Landau, leaned forward and addressed Eichmann in a stern voice.

"I want you to cease this talk of 'creating impressions' here," he said. "You took an oath to tell the truth and that is what you shall do."

Eichmann replied, in the soft pleading voice he adopts when addressing the judges: "The Attorney General is showering me with questions. I have no other reply. What can I do? I really don't know what answer he expects of me."

In response to further questioning, Eichmann insisted that although he had once been bold enough to urge his Gestapo chief, Mueller, to discontinue mass shootings, he had never dared to make other recommendations or decisions. He merely followed orders, he insisted.

Mr. Hausner, hunched over his table, commented sarcastically: "Instead of little you, they could have put a dictaphone on Mueller's desk — right?"

"No," said Eichmann, "I also summarized documents."

A cold-blooded example of Adolf Eichmann's wartime wit over the Nazi mass murders of Jews was put before him in a document. He admitted unwillingly that the quotation made was approximately correct.

The matter involved what Eichmann said was his first and only visit to the chancellery of Der Fuehrer, Adolf Hitler, himself. Although he didn't get to see Hitler, he was asked politely by some unidentified official there whether he would relinquish to the chancellery a few of his deportation trains for some extermination activity of its own.

He testified that he was tremendously impressed at being called to "Der wichtigste Laden im Reich" — the biggest shop in the Reich, says the New York Herald Tribune. Then the Israeli Attorney General Gideon Hausner read from the war-time document this account of what Eichmann later reported of his conversation with the chancellery official:

● DORA WILENSKY ● MEMORIAL

Fund Award has been won by Miss Carmen Couillard, associate professor at St. Patrick's School of Social Welfare of the University of Ottawa. The Fund, established to develop leadership in Canadian social work practice, will assist Miss Couillard in financing her work for a doctoral degree at the University of Chicago School of Social Service Administration. The awards committee, headed by Miss Bessie Touzel, executive director of the Ontario Welfare Council, made its decision on the basis of ability in social work practice and academic achievement. It is a condition of the Award that the winner, who may take advanced training anywhere in the world, must return to Canada to work. The Fund was established in 1959, following the death of Miss Dora Wilensky, to honor her recognized leadership in social welfare in Canada for more than thirty years. At the time of her death, Miss Wilensky was executive director of the Jewish Family and Child Service in Toronto. The chairman of the Fund is Ray Wolfe; acting chairman, Ben M. Manson; both of Toronto. Miss Couillard graduated in 1951 from St. Patrick's School of Social Welfare and joined the staff of the Toronto Mental Health Clinic. In 1955 she became a member of the faculty of St. Patrick's School. She has completed a quarter at the Chicago School, winning "A" standing in all courses. The Award will be made bi-annually until the Fund is of such a size as to warrant the annual award originally planned. It is the hope of the directors of the Fund that it will attract contributions. It has already been used as a memorial fund on occasions of bereavement by many who are interested in this memorial to Miss Dora Wilensky. Those who created the Fund hope that this may also become the object of bequests. The Dora Wilensky Memorial Fund Award committee is: Miss Bessie Touzel, chairman of the Ontario Welfare Council; Professor Marjory Seeley, of the School of Social Work, University of Toronto; Mrs. David Vise, a former president of the Jewish Family and Child Service; Mrs. William Palca, Miss Joy A. Maines, executive secretary, C.A.S.W.; F. R. MacKinnon, Deputy Minister of Public Welfare of Nova Scotia; Miss Jessie Watters, Children's Aid Society of Metro Toronto; Dr. Albert Rose, School of Social Work, University of Toronto; Miss Marguerite Mathieu, School of Social Work, University of Montreal; Miss Martha Moscrop. Board of directors is: Stephen Berger, Arthur E. Gelber, Miss Florence Hutner, United Jewish Welfare Fund; Bryant Kassirer, Abe Levine, Mark A. Levy, Ben M. Manson, J. Irving Oelbaum, Mrs. William Palca, Miss Florence Philpott, Ben Sadowski, Dr. Albert Rose, Jack Shindman, Miss Bessie Touzel, Mrs. David Vise, Ray Wolfe.

Brights FINE CANADIAN Wines
SINCE 1874

At your sabbath table, a decanter of wine is as much at home as a challah.

No wine is more welcome in Jewish homes in Canada than Mazel Tov, a wine made from Concord grapes grown on the sunny slopes of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mazel Tov is ruby red in colour, and richly sweet—but not cloying—to the taste. It's a wine you'll "remember", the kind of wine that you used to taste many years ago.

Mazel Tov, made 'Kosher l'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year for every 'simcha'.

Leader Sees Organized Anti-Semitism In U.S. At Lowest Point

The executive head of the coordination and policy-making body for the major religious and secular Jewish community relations organizations in the United States said, "On the level of political anti-Semitism, I see no organized anti-Semitic political movement of consequence." The statement was made by Isaiah M. Minkoff, executive director of the National Community Relations Advisory Council, who addressed a panel on Anti-Semitism in the United States at the Jewish Labor Committee's Fourth National Trade Union Conference on Civil Rights at Unity House, in New York.

Mr. Minkoff said, "In the case of anti-Semitism in the United States, we have about us a free society where the government, public opinion, the media of communication, and liberal social forces are all committed to the complete eradication of anti-Semitism, not only on the level of its overt manifestations, but even on the level of latent prejudice. The goal of the American Jewish community is complete equality as individuals, complete security and freedom as a group and a dynamic Jewish creativity in an open, egalitarian society."

Mr. Minkoff conceded that organized anti-Semitism was at its lowest point or lowest ebb a year ago but that "during the past year there has been greater activity among the organized group of hate-mongers." He cited a list of anti-Jewish publications from New Jersey, to California to Birmingham, Alabama, but he added, "they don't amount to a tinker's damn."

He said that despite front-page publicity, George Lincoln Rockwell's American Nazi Party "is not being bought by the American people." We may safely conclude, that political anti-Semitism certainly poses no threat, or in the judicial terminology of Supreme Court Justice Holmes, 'It poses no clear and present danger.'"

Surveying the late 1959 and early 1960 rash of swastika-daubing incidents around the world, Mr. Minkoff said that at the time questions were raised as to whether the incidents were organized. He said after interviews were held and the situation analyzed, "One thing became clear very soon: there was no organized plot, no organized force behind these incidents."

Turning to discrimination, the Jewish community leader said that "considerable progress has been made in all areas in our fight against discriminatory practices. All down the line the barriers in housing, in employment and even more so in educational institutions, have been broken. New legislation, changing of mores, economic factors, new disciplines in pure mathematics, in physics, and in engineering have opened up new opportunities which enlist the skills of many Jewish young people.

"To be sure, there are spots that are still contaminated with all types of discrimination. You find it among some employment agencies, and some barriers in exclusive residential areas, and especially, much more markedly in private clubs."

Mr. Minkoff said that latent anti-Semitism existed in America's behavior patterns and these need watching. He added that the success of breaking down such latent anti-Semitism would be accomplished as long as American society recognized that it was not a Jewish question but one of national responsibility in combatting.

"Present-day America," he said, "rejects anti-Semitism. In fact, it condemns it. And in this respect, we can take great comfort from the fact that the John Birch Society, while so sensationally reflecting the views of the ultra-right forces in this country, yet finds it important to disassociate itself from any taint of anti-Semitism, clearly indicating that the anti-Semitic horse is not a popular one to ride."

The NCRAC leader said that the Birch Society posed "by its tactics of irresponsibility" a threat to the general community and as such also to Jews."

"The Jews of America," he concluded, "want to be self-assertive, identifiable and identified as Jews. They want to be integrated into the American culture and yet retain and continue our distinctive Jewish heritage. We look upon ourselves as part of the plural American society and not as a minority, whose rights we want to defend against the oppression of a majority. There are no minorities or majorities in a plural society and it is about time for us to abandon that nomenclature and old perspective that are not applicable to our present society. The term 'minority' is purely a numerical designation in America."

EICHMANN LOOKED FOR MORE ELEGANT WAY TO MASSACRE JEWS THAN BY SHOOTING

"And then he said to me: 'Couldn't I give him a few of my trains from my timetables.' And I told myself, My God, I am here in this biggest of all offices in Der Feuhrer's office — and they have been supervising me from here! This is the most important shop in the entire Reich, and here this uncle asks me whether he could have a few trains. And he is very courteous and cordial, because he wants to stoke the stove with a few idiots."

Asked whether this was what he said on that occasion, Eichmann answered calmly: "I do not remember whether I said this word for word, but so far as the content is concerned I must agree that this is correct."

The matter was not, however, pursued further after Eichmann said he could not remember the date of the visit or exactly which official he spoke with, says the New York Herald Tribune. Like most of the dragging cross-examination, this vivid episode, evoked by a yellowed document, seemed to get the prosecution nowhere in the end, at least so far as "hard" evidence was concerned.

He was asked repeatedly about statements he was quoted as having made to the effect that he had suggested to his superiors that a more elegant way must be found than the massacres of Jews by shooting, "because our people are becoming sadists."

In an extraordinary, two-hour questioning of the prisoner, which was as gentle in tone as it was deadly in aim, Judge Benjamin Halevi went straight to the heart of the Eichmann case. The judge drew Eichmann, question by question, into a series of positions from which the entangled defendant could not escape.

Eichmann admitted that his vaunted honor 'over his sacred oaths was something he frequently ignored. He admitted, on the one hand, that he blindly followed his bureaucratic orders to the most minute detail in sending Jews to their deaths on many occasions, but on many other occasions he had for one reason or another looked the other way and allowed other Jews to escape.

He admitted that he had approved the escape from Austria of his own Jewish aunt, giving in this case an expression to his "inner feelings" which he denied to millions of other Jews who had died in the gas chambers.

He acknowledged that he had a "split" in himself on matters of conscience, that he lacked "civil courage," and that he harnessed himself into an apparatus of systematic lies to camouflage the extermination activities so that the Jews would be lulled into "self extermination."

Most significantly of all, Judge Halevi threw a challenge to Eichmann at the end of his questions and Eichmann turned it down, says the New York Herald Tribune. This might have been a fateful decision for him. The challenge was that Eichmann personally submit to the court all the controversial and fateful volumes of transcribed tape recordings made in Argentina by Eichmann in 1957 for a journalist named Willem Sassen.

The so-called Sassen documents were brought into this trial surrounded by a cloud of legal smog. But Eichmann firmly declined to submit them — meaning to authenticate them, as his words — so they can become part of the trial record. As it is, only a small fraction of the transcriptions from a total of eighty-six tapes have been admitted to evidence, and these were allowed only because they bear Eichmann's handwritten corrections or annotations, thus proving that he had passed on them.

Eichmann's Jewish aunt was identified only as a person named Dorsi, who left Austria with her husband and daughter for Switzerland in 1943. She was on his mother's side of the family.

In admitting that he had intervened to save the woman and that he had "closed an eye" he explained that there had been "no official consideration of it, or registration or serial number."

"You could give expression to your human feelings?" the judge asked.

When Eichmann gave a qualified "yes," Judge Halevi told him he did not have to apologize for that.

Judge Halevi delivered a preachment, reminding Eichmann that this might be his last chance on earth to make a frank and sincere statement of his wartime role in the slaughter of Jews by the Nazis in World War II. Eichmann, former head of the Jewish affairs section of the Gestapo (secret police), faces hanging as a leading executant in the Nazi genocide conspiracy.

Judge Halevi exhorted the waxen, emaciated prisoner to model his behavior after two leading Nazis, Vitez André, of the Hungarian Ministry of Interior, and Hans Frank, Governor General of Nazi-occupied Poland. Both, according to Judge Halevi, confessed their responsibility for wartime crimes.

Eichmann, possibly having recalled that both Frank and André were executed, was unmoved. His icy unrepentence irked Judge Halevi, who leaned back in his chair at the close of session and said resignedly:

"You enjoy the privileges of an accused person. We cannot force you to do anything."

"But," he added, "what we are concerned with is the assessment of the element of the truth in your testimony."

"Be a man," was the central theme of Judge Halevi's sermon, but Eichmann was not in a mood for breast-beating repentance. He listened with polite attention as the judge pleaded quietly with him to "show courage and admit responsibility for the things that happened."

There were misty eyes in the public gallery. But the preachment seemed to have no more effect on Eichmann than — to use his own expression — "a drop of water on a hot rock."

Eichmann said he agreed with the testimony of an early witness, Dean Karl Ernest Gruber, the Berlin clergyman who said Germans lacked civic courage. Eichmann conceded that his fate could have been avoided.

"Yes," he said, "experts should study why large sections of the nation abandoned their civic courage and blindly obeyed orders. But of course it was wartime. It was a question of the period, education, and training."

"But if you now examine your conscience you would admit that you lacked civic courage?" Judge Halevi asked. "Yes," Eichmann said. "Like many others."

Eichmann portrayed himself as a frustrated idealist, a part-time follower of the precepts of Immanuel Kant, eighteenth century German philosopher.

Judge Halevi asked if Eichmann felt himself an idealist because he had obediently carried out the orders of his Nazi superiors.

"At that time," Eichmann replied, "I understood it to be my duty to obey orders as a National Socialist. Today I realize that nationalism in its radical form can lead to terrible excesses."

Judge Halevi said: "To have the courage not to give a hand to committing crimes — this might have been difficult at the time. But what about the present? Do you have the necessary courage today to take upon yourself the responsibility for the thing that happened then?"

Eichmann replied: "From the human point of view I have my own thoughts — I have made a reckoning. (He had previously confessed to moral guilt.)

"But one must draw a distinction between what I have committed and what I have been falsely charged with committing."

He paused for a moment, straightened his shoulders and said firmly: "I was not the one who issued orders. I was only a receiver of orders. If this is punishable by law, then I am ready to take the penalty."

Thus Eichmann tenaciously refused to admit legal responsibility for Nazi crimes.
